living in design

18

What happens when you spend a lifetime collecting art, curating furniture and forming a design ethos? You create a distinct and authentic way of living that cannot be mistaken
for anything but a true expression of yourself.

Exhibiting the unstained colours and grain variations of natural timber, the TONE CHAIR by Leif Design Park draws on traditional Japanese parquetry. Available in five different veneer and timber leg combinations, TONE combines a solid American black Walnut or American white Oak leg frame with plywood seat and a choice of veneer combinations. First exhibited at Milano Salone Satellite in 2007, it has recently been selected to be manufactured and distributed by De La Espada.

Go upwards, not forward, and vertical not outwards – maximise your opportunities and inhabit the 2D space of the wall with the URBIO. This space saving solution is designed as a modular vessel that allows you to custom build your grid with as many storage plates as needed. Plant a vertical garden or organise the goodies that normally overflow from your drawer – whatever you use it for whether it be planting, organising or space saving, the neodymium magnetic grids of the URBIO make this product easy to put together and put to good use. So get creative and install one in each room, perfect as a feature or to compartmentalise knick-knacks.

French designer Ionna Vautrin has recently created three adorable characters for ZOO, her house brand, using Kvadrat Maharam material. The Parisian-based designer devised the ZOO collection to offer plush animals sized around one metre high making them extra huggable and easy to for children to befriend.

A combination of marble, wood and cork sit together to create a natural-looking assemblage for the purpose of sitting. Ergonomically designed with shaped seat pads, the KREOO creations are a modern mimesis of nature. Perfect for any outdoor garden setting and designed to evoke the idea of pebbles in a garden, the stools are available for both indoor and outdoor purposes.
