Designer Christophe Pillet has expanded his 'Blessed' collection with the launch of this two-tone freestanding tub for marble-bathroom expert Kroon. As expected, marble options abound, with Bianco Carrara or Bianco del Re for the inside, while the exterior can be customised in a range of marbles, travertines and semi-precious stones. £35,922 (kroon.com).

Designing a spa-like bathroom is largely a question of tricking your brain into thinking it's somewhere calming and tropical. This washbasin by Rok Ceramics is part of the new 'Roku-Batu' collection, intended to help you do exactly that. Available in round, oval and rectangular shapes, the basins are inspired by Balinese interiors and feature a glaze that's speckled with one of three neutral shades of mica (nascovite mineral). Price on application (rokceramics.com).

Three of the best Candy-coloured essentials

- 1 'Charoi' mirror, approx £85, Klewing.com
- 2 'Gelato' towel, £24, Magnberg.com
- 3 'Geometric' soap dish by Hansel Chad Ceramics, £21, Glassette.com

New tapware player in the game Amphora made a splash when it hit Milan design week with the launch of its first range, 'Real'. The brand, which takes its name from the Ancient Greek word for vase or jar, was created by siblings Rocco, Silvia and Fabio Ponsi, who come from a family of traditional tap manufacturers. The Tuscan trio's first line, designed by Italian architecture practice Studio Adolini, not only offers taps, but showers and matching accessories, too. Each piece is made of 'marine-grade' stainless steel. From approx £105 (amphoradesign.it).
